

I was a child who loved the sun, moon, and stars , but didn't know her dream. Only recently did I realise what I wanted to be. It wasn't completely down to earth but it felt right. I wanted something fresh, new. I wanted to be an astrophysics, understanding the universe.

Yes, it sounded crazy, mother constantly told me of the dangers of it. Crashing rockets, implosions, but non of it mattered. Later, I received an email from NASA . Did they finally get the letter sent for an application as a cadet there? I read the email. They did, and I was approved as a young cadet! This was life changing. I went to NASA a few days later and I made some friends there. Cat , the adorably freckled , dark skinned redhead who was honestly a great physics expert, and Sun who was an Asian tech - whiz with piercing blue eyes and spikey black hair.

We were having tons of fun till Vanessa came . She had long, loosely curled hair, and hazel eyes as well as dark skin like mine . She was also one the American mayor's daughter , total pompous rich kid . She constantly picked on me for no reason. I kept things professional though. This was a once in a lifetime opportunity I couldn't miss.

I slept a lot in physics class. I couldn't stand all those boring numbers and calculations! Cat helped me afterwards. She was a Junior Physicist after all. I had a presentation and Vanessa came along as I was preparing it. " You really think you can become a Nobel Prize winner some day?! Pathetic! ", weak taunt. I ignored it. I presented on a few constellations after perfectly analysing them carefully. It wasn't easy, but I did great. Vanessa scoffed, and everyone else? They applauded! Sun told me to be careful with Vanessa because of some dark past he never wanted to talk about. Whatever it was, Sun clearly had some skeletons in his closet.

